1.2 Concept

A general measurement determines the result of a measurement or determination made for a patient. The information model is used to record the measurement results for which no specific information models have yet been formulated. The information model is not intended for laboratory determinations to be carried out on the material taken from the patient.

1.3 Mindmap

1.4 Purpose

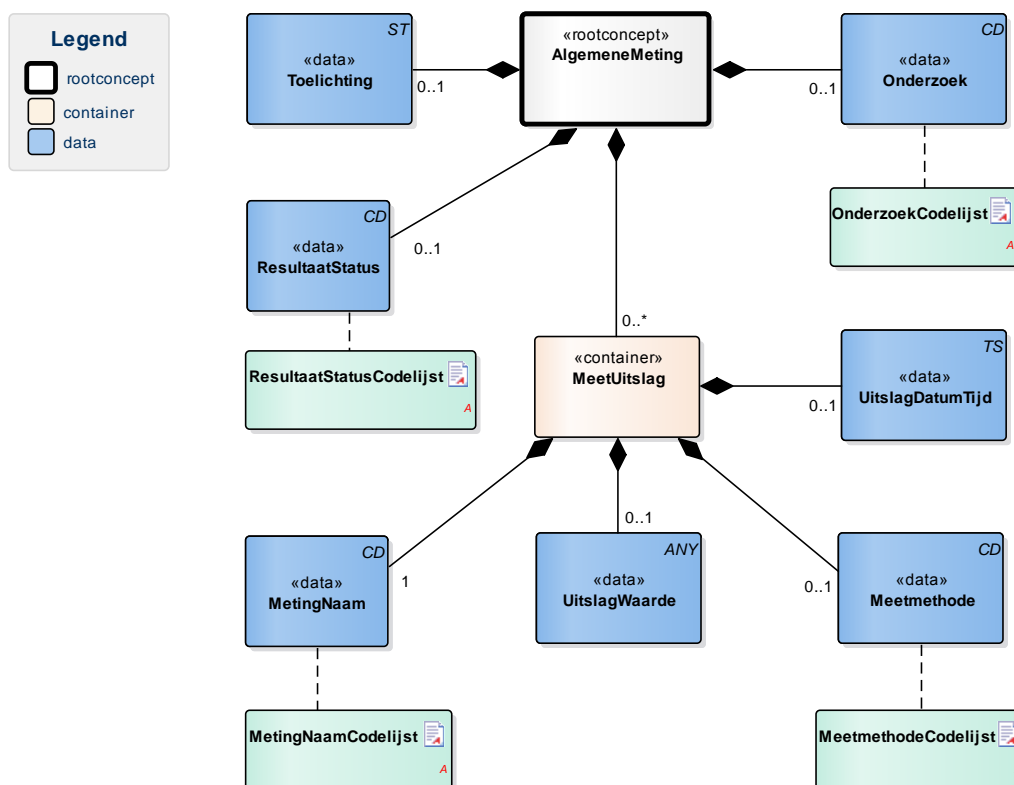

The measurement and documentation of physiological observations are an important tool for evaluating a patient's condition. This information model offers the option to record various relevant measurement values.
